Chair of the Political Science Department	Jan. 2022 – Dec. 2024
Professor of Political Science	July 2017 – Present
Associate Professor of Political Science with tenure	July 2015 – June 2017
Assistant Professor of Political Science	July 2007 – June 2015

- Research civil and international wars, peacebuilding, conflict resolution, and humanitarian aid, and disseminate findings through publications, conferences, and media appearances
Conduct field research in 12 different conflict zones (mainly in the Democratic Republic of Congo, in addition to Burundi, Colombia, Cyprus, Israel-Palestine, Northern Ireland, South Sudan, Timor-Leste, and Somaliland)
- Teach undergraduate, master's, and doctoral courses
- Mentor undergraduate and graduate students, as well as junior faculty
- Contribute proactively to college and university governance, with specific responsibilities regarding trustees (2008-2009), online learning (2012-2013), budget (2015-2016), the chairs of Barnard departments and programs (2023-2024), and the executive oversight of the Columbia Global Center in Africa (2012-2019), the Barnard Political Science Department (2015-present), and the Columbia Institute for War and Peace Studies (2022-present)

Key Accomplishments:

Research and Writing

- Authored three influential books, complemented by a diverse body of peer-reviewed articles, policy pieces, and public-oriented writings, contributing to the advancement of social science knowledge on war and peace
- Presented research at 399 academic and policy forums, was featured in 195 news stories, and rank in the top 1% of most-cited International Relations authors (Stanford/Elsevier Top Scientists List, 2017-2025), showcasing significant public interest and impact

- Honored with six career awards, seven book awards, two article awards, one teaching award, and over $550,000 in research grants, affirming excellence in scholarship and education
- Influenced intervention strategies of key international bodies (including several United Nations departments, foreign affairs ministries, and non-governmental organizations), highlighting the widespread relevance of my research

Institutional

- Awarded tenure at both Barnard College and Columbia University (2015), recognizing sustained excellence in academia
- Appointed as a Senior Research Scholar at the Columbia School of International and Public Affairs (2015) following a courtesy appointment (2009), reflecting interdisciplinary contributions
- Elected as Department Chair (2022) and “Chair of Chairs” (2023), subsequently awarded the Ann Whitney Foundation endowed chair (2024), underscoring peer recognition and leadership capabilities in academic governance

Leadership (Collaborative Accomplishments)

During my three-year term as Department Chair (2022-2024), I managed the political science department, overseeing curriculum, course offerings, and other scholarly matters for 200 students annually as well as supervising the recruitment, promotion, retention, and budgeting for up to 50 teaching and administrative staff. In this role, I:

- Solidified Political Science's status as a top-choice major at Barnard by implementing engaging programs and fostering a dynamic learning environment
- Spearheaded the growth and diversification of the Political Science curriculum by initiating, designing, and implementing a comprehensive reform process to align with contemporary global and societal challenges while hiring new faculty members
- Ensured the graduation of 60 to 80 Political Science majors annually through effective academic guidance, comprehensive course offerings, and robust support systems
- Championed the recruitment and/or career advancement of thirteen faculty members and one administrator, significantly enhancing departmental expertise and leadership
